

Adjusting to Coronavirus + Supporting Racial Equity

This is an unprecedented time, as we experience both a global pandemic and a powerful movement for racial justice. At the Training Fund, we stand with our Black members and partners. We strongly believe that Black lives matter. Approximately 50% of our members using the Training Fund are people of color. As a labor-management partnership, we are proud to create life changing opportunities for our members through access to education and career pathways. We continue to stand by our commitment to advance equity for our members.

When the COVID-19 crisis began, we quickly pivoted to improving our systems and going virtual in order to better serve our members, who are essential workers. In this newsletter, you'll see other updates about how we're continuing to improve access and equity—virtual workshops, supporting students' adjustment to online classes, support for English Language Learners, and more. We're proud to serve our members and hope that you're staying safe and healthy this summer.

Summer & Fall Updates from Colleges

We checked in with our community colleges partners on what’s happening with summer classes and how things are shaping up for fall. All of the colleges have had to be flexible, institute strict protocols to limit the risk of exposure to COVID-19, and pivot to virtual classes when necessary. The summer classes for most of the colleges are online, with some limited in-person instruction or clinical training for select programs at North Seattle College, Lake Washington Technical College, Edmonds Community College, and University of Washington. For fall classes, most colleges are planning a mix of online instruction with labs and clinical training either in-person (if permitted) or virtual (if there are COVID-19 outbreaks in their communities).

It’s not just classes that have moved online—Edmonds Community College told us that they’ve transitioned student services to an online format as well, so that students can access advising, financial aid, registration, and other services. Whatcom Community College also has a Virtual Welcome Center that provides those services online.

Virtual Workshops

Because of the global pandemic, we’ve moved our workshops and other events online so that you can join from your computer or phone. In September, we have three workshops planned:

- September 19: Prepare for the TEAS test. If you need to take the TEAS test to apply to nursing school, be sure to attend this workshop.
- September 23: Get ready for your Statistics Class. Learn an overview of Statistics concepts you’ll need to master, strategies for successful completion of the class, and how stats matters in your healthcare career.
- September 27: Learn to write an effective personal statement so that you can improve your chances of getting accepted into programs and moving forward with your goals.

Employee Spotlight

JESSIE KIMES joined the Training Fund team in June 2020, as a Regional Education Navigator for the North Seattle region. Prior to this role, she was the Program Manager for Veteran Services at Green River College and also worked as a Student Success Coach for Pierce College’s Joint Base Lewis-McChord campus. Being part of a Department of Defense family, Jessie moved frequently and has lived on military bases in both Japan and the United States, before most recently settling in the Pacific Northwest. She earned a BA in International Affairs from Eastern Washington University and a Master in Teaching from Saint Martin’s University.

Having spent several years assisting active-duty servicemembers, veterans and their families further their education, she understands the challenges that working adults sometimes face when going back to school. It is her passion for helping people realize their greatest potential, combined with a belief that education can truly change lives, that inspires Jessie to continue guiding people on their pathways to academic and professional success.

When not working, Jessie enjoys spending time with her kids, cooking, traveling, and seeking out treasures in local thrift stores. An eternal optimist, she also holds onto hope that the Mariners will, someday, actually make it to the World Series.
